Open to Change

The Gospel of Luke provides some of the more memorable stories that linger in our moral imagination. This remains true for this Sunday's readings where, Jesus recounts the story of the Good Samaritan.

The scholar of the law asked a question, "And who is my neighbour?". This inquiry called on Jesus to reflect on response, a reflection that we still need to carry on today. The Samaritan traveller is the only one who stops to care for the man found half-dead on the side of the road. The priest and the Levite, both religious officials connected to the temple, do not stop to help the victim.

There are clear implications to this Gospel narrative. Jesus broke through limitations on love imposed by ethnicity, blood and creed. Samaritans and Jews had a long history of antagonism. In fact, not long before Jesus offered this parable, the road through a Samaritan town was closed to him when the townspeople learned his destination was Jerusalem.

Likewise, Jesus obviously challenges the religious priorities of people who worked in the temple. Contact with human blood rendered one unfit for liturgical service. The officials who hurry past the stricken man do so, so that they could remain able to do their job. Jesus in fact does not change the purity laws that would have rendered them unclean, but he does challenge the priorities that guided the following of those laws. In Jesus' mind, compassion to a suffering Israelite is more important even than service in the temple.

Jesus also highlights the sacrifice made by the Samaritan. The traveller offered his time, attended to the victim's wounds and offered two silver coins and even more if needed. "Take care of him. If you spend more than what I have given you, I shall repay you on my way back". Two silver coins at that time would have been the equivalent of two- or three-days' wage.

Jesus tries to help the young scholar of the law re-order his priorities regarding purity, holiness and ethnicity. Jesus recognized that this scholar of the law was open to change. Change and repentance, is central to Luke's Gospel. Luke shows us a scholar of the law undergoing this exact process. Without losing an appreciation of his nation's ancient traditions, Jesus helps him re-order his priorities to match God's hope for Israel and, through them, for all of humanity. Through this Gospel passage, Jesus calls on his disciples to be so transformed today.

At our Lord's call, we need to leave behind assumptions about ethnic, political and social boundaries and learn to be sensitive to God's call to compassion wherever we hear it.
