A Time for new Beginnings:

There is something about September that makes us think about beginnings. The summer is drawing to a close, the evenings are getting shorter, children have returned to school, and familiar routines are beginning again. For many families, it is a time of new books, new teachers, new classes and, sometimes, new challenges. But September is also a reminder that life is always moving on. We cannot hold on to yesterday, and we do not know exactly what tomorrow will bring. What we can do is make the most of today. Perhaps that is a good thought for all of us at this time of year. We can look back with gratitude for the good times of the summer, but we can also look forward to new hope. A new beginning does not have to be something dramatic. It might simply mean making a phone call we have been putting off, visiting someone who is lonely, starting something we have always wanted to do, or making a little more time for the people who matter most. Every morning gives us another opportunity to begin again.
