A window is a strange thing.
It lets you see the world without ever being part of it.

You can watch people laugh,
watch life move forward, watch moments pass by all while standing
quietly behind the glass.

Sometimes I wonder if we are all just like windows in someone's life.

Present enough to be seen, but never close enough to truly be felt.

And one day the curtains close and suddenly you're no longer part of the view.
